Yu, who had two previous convictions, pleaded guilty, and was sentenced to nine months hard labour and recommended for banishment.

Chochrane told the Court that the Larceny Squad found it almost impossible to trace the thieves till two weeks ago when a Chinese male informed Police that someone had offered him nouncement in the press of lost hub caps to be returned to Towners on application the office was crowded daily.

Stolen hub caps are difficult to replace and can only be obtain. ed from the car manufacturers. Replacement of these would com nbout $80.

Death March In North China

Peiping, Feb. 21.

Five aged Catholic priests-three French, one Dutch and one Canadian—died of hunger, disease and exhaustion during a Communist "death march" after the Reds burned a monastery near Yangchaiping in South Chahar, according to Chinese Christians reaching Peiping today.

The refugees—freed by the Reds three weeks ago -said that six Chinese converts were stoned and clubbed to death. They said that 16 others died together with their foreign priests while they marched from prison to prison for months. The pairs then retire s uth-east, pointing the toe, and dragging the back leg dellcately along the ground. Several times this manocuvre has got mt thumping on the plush handrail of my box, shouting for mere.

Many of these ladies and gentlemen are married, and at least two of them have come all the way from Glasgow. All the same, I don't see why this should lend them such a special distinction If I thought I was in line for the Veleta Championship I'd walk here all the way from John o' Gronts in bare feet,

But my dancing is of a different kind. It has been classed by some people as the best three falls out of five.

AN ARMY OFFICER WHO BECAME

JACK THOMAS

Through the dusty Burmeso village shuffled a yellow-robed Buddhist monk. The morning sun beat down on his shaven head. His feet were bare save for primi-tive sandals. With downcast eyes he moved from coor to door, holding out his begging bowl.

The monk was known to the villagers as U Nipuna, "the gentle But thousands of miles away, in the files of the War Office in London, you would find his real was a confirmed oplum smoker, name. It is Captain H. R. Robinson, late of the 91st Punjab Light to the den known as the House

I heard it yesterday from Captain Robinson's own lips, as we sat in the lounge of a West End hotel. On one side of us two actors swapped tales of their recent triumphs. On the other side a couple of film men argued. All around was noise and laughter. But Captain Robinson took notice. He seemed to be surrounded by a pool of quiet that nothing could disturb. His eyes were closed. He is blind. This was his story:

Gazetted from school to the Indian Army during the 1914-18 war, he was sent to Burma. There the scent of frangipani blossoms, the tinkling of pageda bells, the laughter of the brightly-robed people, wove a spell around him that he was never to escape.

Each morning Robinson rose before dawn and went to the well with the other monks for a bucket of cold water for his ablutions. Each morning he swept out his bare cell and made his begging round of the village. Then he would sit at the feet of his teacher, U Nyana, and learn the things that those who would walk in the way of Buddha must know.

Again Captain Robinson tried to rid himself of the oplum craving—this time by a trip to Eng-land. But the flight was useless. He had to go back to Mandalay.

Soon he was smoking the drug twelve, then sixteen, hours a day. All his possessions were sold to buy opium. His friends descried him. Only one remained faithful -a twelve-year-old Burmese boy named Ba Set.

One day the police arrived at Captain Robinson's house. They had a warrant for his arrest. It was the final degradation.

"My main objection to Christianity is its 'defeatist' outlook. Ever since I lost my sight twentytwo years ago, I have listened to broadcast sermons and talks. As I often advise my younger friends: Never reject advice. Take it all in, sift it, and retain what you think good. It may mean gifting a ton of rubbish to get a grain of good, but it is worth while.'

"And so I have listened—and not always in vain.

"To me, life is sorrow. that does not depress me. row is the steel on which one may sharpen the sword of the spirit. A man who enters this life free from worry, and who has no eye for the sorrows of his fellow-men, is as the man in the Bible who buried his talents. His incarnation has been wasted.

"Of all sins, a sin against children is the most helnous. But nevertheless, it is not the effect of a sin on any person which is the main issue. The main issue is the effect of one's own wrongdoing upon one's own evolution. As far as the one affected is con-corned, your sin is one more factor with which you can make or mar the process of your own evolution—according to the way in which you react to it."

Captain Robinson works among his small patients in London's grey surroundings, but before his inner eyes is always the vision of the snow-capped peaks of the Himalayss. Somewhere in those fastnesses there is a monastery where he intends to end his days. Recently he started to make the journey, but passport difficulties forced him to return. Hb is undisturbed.

THIS AGE OF THE MASS MAN

An "inescapable tension" between the Church and secular society is the starting point of an inquiry carried out by the Social and Industrial Commission of the Church Assembly, the results of which are embodied in a report to

By C. B. MORTLOCK

The essential characteristics and relationships of the Christian community and the secular community present complexities which today appear to many people to make them irreconcilable. The commission, over which Sir Anderson Montague-Barlow presided, constantly questions assumptions which are generally accepted, such as that more social services are necessarily a good thing in all circumstances.

be presented to the Assembly at its

The Welfare State, as the report terms it is a consequence of a break. down in community life in forms hitherto unknown to civilisation—"social disintegration, the formation of monstrously large cities, and the consequent impact of such pressure on the minds and imaginations of millions."

The commission was concerned with assessing "the present opportunities for creating anew community values in English society as we find it." It found itself confronted with "the Mass Man without roots in any natural setting or spontaneous association with his fellows."

Post-Christian Society

What is to be the attitude of the Christian Church to what the report calls "post Christian society"?

"The advocates of withdrawal from the world, even in its extreme form of a Church prepared for 'a return to the catacombs,' can, it must be recognised, put forward a strong case.

"The circumstances of our time impose such conditions upon people's lives, it is urged, that the ordinary communicant finds it well-nigh impossible to fulfil the obligation of faithful churchmanship and at the same time play an active part in the social life of the secular community."

On the other hand the Church "can make no truce with the notion that God is interested in men and women only when they are being in the narrow and specific sense 'religious.' The Church is committed . . . to a concern with the secular activities of men and societies."

The Church, being in the world but not of the world, should "persist in repudiating an all too prevalent assumption in secular society, namely, that she is just one more voluntary agency for promoting social welfare under the direction of the Welfare State."

It is not, says the Commission, "the function of the Church to produce good bureaucrats." It would be foolish, even on mundane grounds, for the Church to the itself to any particular social order. The world passeth away" is a reminder of the insecurity and impermanence of the present world order!

Function Of The Family

The report welcomes the newly awakened interest in the sociological significance of the family—the essential community without which none other can exist—but it goes on to say that "it would be dangerous if such attention led to the assumption that the family exists primarily for the strength which it may afford to the collective organisation of a nation."

The point is that the family and the social community now confront each other and do not look out towards wider aspects than themselves. There is an absence from prevalent views of any conception of purpose and function in the family other than those which are self-regarding or relate it merely to the secular community, as a report of the British Council of Churches recently pointed out.

The Creche Baby

"In a healthy society," says the Commission, "the family would be seen primarily as a self-reliant unit serving the nation on its own initiative." That is certainly not how it principally appears to day.

The extent to which "social services" such as the creche and nursery school, excellent if rightly used, can be the means of undermining or even replacing family life is not always realised, though G. K. Chesterton anticipated the discoveries of the present inquiry when into the mouth of a babe in a creche he put the lines:

"Mother is happy, for Mother is free From the sinister task of attending to me.

And is instead
. . . dancing up forty-eight floors
For love of the Leeds International Stores."

Community Centres

What the report calls "tin rabbithutches" and other mergency substitutes for human habitation, to which large numbers of our people will have to resign themselves for what is very unlikely to be a single decade, will simply have to have a "home from home" if their tenants are to tolerate life in them and not to conceive an aversion to all that living in a family involves.

The Commission, however, sees danger in the otherwise desirable community centre, for "danger exists in all developments which involve more of our collective income being spent for us." It will do the Englishman more good if he and his family can take a share in a community centre in organising their own entertainments than in having them "laid on."

The report urges a renewed concentration on local church life if Christianity is to pnetrate the secular life to a depth it has never done before.

'In other words, shall we in England continue to attempt to spread a thin Christian veneer over a non-Christian society, or shall we attempt the creation of truly Christian communities of one sort or another, parochial and non-parochial? Can every parish in England become a truly missionary community again?"

Turning the parish into a truly missionary community may involve so much living, working, studying, praying and playing together that Christians may be conspicuous by their absence from other activities of general living.

"We know all that can be said about this," the Commission say, "but the moment seems to be one for withdrawal: the moment for return will not be of our choosing or even of our perception."

"Each individual Christian will have to maintain a ripid system of priorities or he will find that he is drawn this way that that by appeals which, appearing to be based on religious sanctions, are often merely playing on his vanity.

"These situations arise because the the non-Christian majority has never expected the Church to be the Church. Moern and fashionable counsels of maximum co-operation will—only minister to this spersistent delusion that we always give in in the end."

"We have a grave responsibility to common life in a world which has preserve the pattern of Christian turned its back on it. We cannot take any risks, eyen if our counsel, lors blaze with angelic glory."

"Outrageous Saints"

Because so few individuals challenge by their lives the reduced picture of human possibilities now so widely accepted, and because of the flight from responsibility (which is inevitably fostered by the Welfare State and is typified by the soldier who "won't take a stripe"), the Commission suggests that the Church's greatest contribution to the revival of a truly common living will be the production of "two or three outrageous saints."

Meanwhile the problem of penetrating the secular world by a handful of active Christians is complicated by the fact that those same Christians need to be inspired with a proper understanding of the Church's divine fellowship.

Furthermore, "the Church is faced with the task of coming to the rescue with full-time workers in the secular field at one and the same time as those very workers are required to be leaders in the reorganisation of the local church."

To come to particular instances, the notion that the life of the Church can grow solely by means of the so-called indirect apostolate of the open club, with its discussions and enllogues, is, in the opinion of the Commission, "sheer nonsense and contradicts the very notion of growth in community itself."

The report points out that "if the man who should be teaching next generation Christians in the Sunday school is conducting a cycle ride to admire the wonders of nature on behalf of those who, one way or another, have shown that they are closed at any rate to direct Christian influence, there will not be a Church in the next generation."

Christian Vocations

The recommendations of the Commission fall accordingly into two parts. In the first place the Church is bidden to consider the need of directing the attention of Christians to those occupations within the industrial and professional worlds which are particularly liable to turn the scale for or against family and social well-being. In other words, to encourage Church-people deliberately to seek Christian vocations in the secular world.

In the second place is presented the urgency of fostering family life and fellowship in the orbit of the local parish church, and so expressing the worth of each person and the contribution that each person makes to the common life. The conclusion of the whole matter would seem to be that if the Church is to give an effective lead in action it must begin in the Christian family and in the parish church.

Saw His Bride: Went Crazy Bumbleden, Kent. A man who denied that Dr. Summerskill was his Aunt Edith arrived here yesterday, pushing a heavy handcart stacked with forms Telating to the control of birdseed.

He was given an official welcome by the District Pig Overseer, who, it is believed, may have mistaken him for a plain-clothes Inspector of Flannel.

When invited to address a meeting of local lady bureaucrats who were about to give a demonstration of mass quencing in the Drill Hall in aid of Obedience Week, he said that if house. wives would only sock the gristle ration for 24 hours before throwing it away they would greatly increase its salt content, thereby preserving it indefinitely for posterity. He then pulled a cord and unveiled a statue to Mr. Emanuel Shinwell.

Asked by the president of the local branch of the Anti-Liberty League if he had a message of hope for members, he replied in the affirmative. Tell them this old country, is not yet entirely stifled by restrictions and controls," he said. "There are still a few. liberties- that - remain to be suppressed by enterprising busybodies."

So saying, he draped himself dramstically in the flag of the National Give Board and left the town, pushing his heavy handcart stacked with forms relating to the control of birdseed

M.I.5 officials suspect that he may be a drone employed by the Ministry of Compossion for private reasons which it would not be in the public interest to disclose.

Housewives Won't Eat Moby Dick,

Madden, Kent. The mysterious official who left Burnbleden left Friday, pushing a heavy handcart laden with forms, arrived here this morning in a luxurious limousine which is thought to be one of a special consignment of 500 recently delivered to the National Flannel Board.

His first act was to order a barrier to be erected across the main Dover road, which he announced was closed to the general public until further notice. Private vehicular traffic bound for the coast was confiscated, but ministerial cars and Army lorries were diverted via Reading and Crewe.

An important Zoher of Hake from the Midlands, who was on his way to St. Moritz to attend an international coks conference in Vienna, estimated that the wastage of petrol might be equivalent to a 20,000-dollar leakage, or enough steeling to buy comforts for the old folks until next Christmas. Interviewed later by a local news hawk the envelopious official again em. phalically denied that Dr. Summerskill was his Aunt Edith, but admitted that several of his poorer relations held highly paid positions of trust in the Ministry of Compulsion. His wife he added was the String Controller for South Wales, although actually she had been trained as a givet tester and was by profession a monthly nurse.

Tell everybody that I am watching them-intently and shall not hesitate to report their most trivial actions to the proper authorities," he concluded dramatically; and fumped back into his car, which was flying a small flag that a passing cheese nark thought might be the private standard of Inspecier Tarr.

He then drove off in the direction of Folkestone, where he said, he was due to conduct a vigorous mass search of 19,000 citizens who were rumoured to be trodiled together on the cities, easing with longing eyes at the for-Miches sheets, of France.

This hand was played at ten tables in a recent "pairs" competition. The score was game all. North, the dealer, opened with One Heart at all ten tables. East overcalled One Spade, and it was a question what South's reaction should Should he double—a business double-or should he bid his Diamonds? Which alternative is the better psychology? At four tables out of the ten he doubled East's bid. At two of these tables the contract was made, 110 points being scored. At the other two tables the contract was defeated by two tricks with a loss of 500 points.

At the six remaining tables South's psychology was better, and he steer. ed the contract into Six Diamonds at three of these tables (scoring 1,370 points), and into Five Diamonds at the other three (scoring 620 points). The (biggest) swing due to better paychology was thus 1,480 points.

The school which favours the socalled "light" double was seriously upset with the result of this light double. A conventional count of high-card tricks (North's promised 214 plus South's 21/2) combined with the prospect of a ruff or two hardly offers a sufficiently lucrative penalty to offset the probable loss of a very attractive contract in Diamonds if North has a fit for this suit. A good psychologist, will visualise the favourable chances of such a fit while a poor psychologist will be blind to them.

NOTHING BUT THE TRUTH By Fred Majdalany

As there is (but nearly wasn't) only one new film in the West End this week. I have been able to spend some time in the other celluloid world-the less glamorous but equally important one which makes short films. · This world of little films is more extensive than you might suppose.

Its most influential member these days is the Films Division of the Gov. ernment's Central Office of Information.

In the past year the C.O.I. has made 80 films. These range from longish ones like "School for Danger" and "Children on Trial" (which were both shown as main features) to an intriguing little epic called "Stomach Pains in Sheep."

Most of their films are commission. ed by Government Departments, and are sold to the trade for exhibition in the ordinary way. Though each month they distribute free to 3,500 cinemas one picture they consider important.

Apart from the ordinary cinema public they teach a further audience of 5.500,000 a year through their 150 mobile projectors.

They have a library of 14,000 films from which you can make your choice.

Amusing, Too

More than 50 small studios are engaged in making documentaries—some of them consisting of two men, a camera, and a disused garage—and the C.O.I. employed 30 of them last year.

Ronnie Tritton (C.O.I. films chief) and his associates fully realise that documentaries must be entertaining and overcome a tendency to be stuffy and something you ought to see for the good of your soul.

But the difficulties are obvious. As with American radio, the sponsor is all-powerful. If he wants a Tschaikovsky melody set to words stating that "Bultitude's Beans Are Best" he must have it.

If the Ministry of Health orders a film and demands a similar stress on "Bevan's Beautiful Bungalows" the situation is roughly the same. Ministers of the Crown are not necessarily the best judges of what is entertain. ing, and in some of them a slight political bias can be detected.

Three of C.O.I.'s newest films due for release show that this sense of entertainment is making headway.

One, "The Cumberland Story," tells the true story of the reopening of an undersea pit off the Cumberland coast. The other two are instructional films which hold their own as comedies. One, "Designing Women," wittily advises newly weds on the things to buy and not to buy for the home. The other, "Pool of Contentment," is a trifle designed to show senior Civil Servants how unnecessarily difficult they make life for the pool of typists who take "The Swordsman" (Empire) is a Scottish Western in Glorious Mactechnicolour-one of those lovely, unself-conscious adventure stories that are pure Hollywood from start to finish.

The feud between two Americanspeaking Scottish clans is the theme, and there never were two better dressed clans or more blood-thirsty and spectacular feuding.

A MacArden (Larry Parks) loves a Glowan' (Ellen Drew), and after an incident as treacherous as the Mas. sacre of Glencoe, which delights all right-minded schoolboys, peace comes to the glens.

All the usual Hollywood.Scottish trimmings are there-including a feast like an advertisement in Life and a brand new climate, Never, surely, can the Highlands have enjoyed so many days of blazing, uninterrupted sunshine. I loved every minute of this film.

When you translate a famous novel into another medium you enjoy great advantages; but you have to pay for them. What Sir Alexander Korda gained by choosing Anna Karenina is obvious enough—the world-wide pres. tige of the novel; a powerful story; character drawing of a depth and intensity possible only to genius; a background rich in incident and colour. And the drawbacks? They are obvious, too. The ideal film story concentrates on a few people and their reactions to each other and events over a short period of time. The Unities are to play and film what corsets are to a woman-not essential, but a greatsafeguard against sagging. A huge, sprawling masterpiece like "Anna Karenina" can only be squeezed into the framework of the screen by ruth. lessly lopping off all the bits that bulge

When some of us are always complaining of original works being mutilated it seems ungrateful to suggest that this one has been treated too respectfully. The fact remains, as Korda remarked dispassionately after the preview, that the film will be great. ly improved by cutting. After all, when one pundit (not a film critic) can remark on the air that the 1935 Garbo version was "all about a horse race," a too sensitive conscience in these matters would hardly seem to pay.

Anna Karenina has already been given a review in these columns. Reflection confirms certain immediate impressions.

The first is wonder, even awe, at Tolstoy's prodigious power of creation. He, can fill, as only the greatest can. canvas after canvas with characters, all more vital than half the people you know. The screen is an impressionistic art unsuited to subtle analysis of motive. Yet you do, I think, really come to know the unhappy, conventional woman who rebels against society and is crushed, and the poor priggish hus. band to whom scandal means a hideous martyrdom.

Vivien Leigh may not be an ideal Anna—the amusing minx is, I fancy, more her line-but the has beauty and intelligence: and Sir Ralph Richard. son's Karenin is superb. If, by con-'rast. Kieron Moore's Vronsky seems a little superficial-well that's the sort of man he was. If he were not, we should have a different story.

Daughter of Darkness (Carlton) is another British film bound to please a hie public, in spite of wild improbabilities, and accents that night have come 4 COMING TO THE

to a Yorkshire farm straight from Bloomsbury, and probably did.

My own fancy is for thrillers whose whole plot makes sense; but if you don't happen to boggle at the notion of a smallish girl stranglir: 6ft 3in heavyweight boxers with her bare hands without suffering a scratch or a tear in her frock, then here is exciting hokum.

This film introduces a brilliant new. comer, Siobhan McKenna. Miss Mc-Kenna is from the Abbev Theatre and pronounces her baffling Christian name Sho.vawn, What Mark Twain said of foreigners is true also of the Irish: they spell better than they pronounce. Maxwell Reed makes a fine, upstanding victim! Anne Crawford is attractive and competent, though not my idea of a Yorkshire farmer's wife and Liam Redmond gives a beautiful little study of a priest.

Our Serial Story THREE FOR LUCK

MAJOR MIKE SULLIVAN, ex-policeman who became a paratroop hero. has met

ARTHUR MAYO, millionaire race. horse owner, whose horse

HAPPY MUNSTERMAN, is favourite for the Guineas and the Derby. Attempts have been made to kill the horse, one of them foiled by Mike and

MOIRA MAYO, the millionaire's beau. tiful daughter. Mike suspects

DIAMOND HOTCHKISS, race gang leader, and his right-hand man,

TURKEY REDDIN, former all-in wrestler. While Mike and Moira are away in Newmarket Mayo is kidnapped in Liverpool. In a raid on a house where he was held Mike cap. tures Reddin and hands him to the police. He tells Hotchkiss that if any harm comes to Mayo Reddin will be charged with murder and MIKE goes down to Brighton and finds that the Hotchkiss gang is still well. known in the seaside resort.

"They've gone up in the world a bit. They have a place of their own now -a pub called the Turkey Run. Quite a posh place for them. Got an orchestra and a dance floor at the back. You'd scarcely notice them in the crowd nowadays. The Turkey Run is quite popular with holidaymakers as well as the shady types."

"Ah, well it takes a clever man to spot a crook nowadays, I expect," said Mike as he went off to his room for a wash before dinner.

Escape

After a hasty meal he decided to investigate this Turkey Run. He found it in a back street in the less select part of the town, not far from the railway station. It was a pretentiouslooking place, all chromium plate and red paint on the outside.

The name of the licensee above the door interested him. The sign ran. "Thomas Reddin, licensed to sell wines, spirits and beer on or off the premises."

So Turkey Reddin had a pub? The name showed a sense of humour. that Mike felt had come from Turkey's backer in this venture rather than from the ex-wrestler himself. -

The lounge bar inside was a masterpiece of expensive bad taste. It was a garish mixture of red leather, shiny tubular steel and pseudo-Spanish decorations. But it seemed to be popular, judging from the crowd milling round the bar. Mike sat down at a table and ordered a drink. There was an evening paper on the chair beside him, and he picked it up and glanced at it idly. He had been reading it for a minute or two before his eyes fell on a paragraph which caught his attention. It

read: "REMANDED MAN ESCAPES

FROM CELLS. "After being remanded for a week at St. Hilda's police court (Lancashire) on a charge of stealing a motor-car, Thomas Reddin, of no fixed address, escaped from the cells of the police station, where he was being kept awaiting removal to Walton Gaol, Liverpool. It is believed that he was aided in his getaway by two men in a highpowered car which was seen parked outside the police station about the time of the escape. Police throughout Lancashire are searching for the escaped prisoner."

'Poppy Cock'

So they had traced Reddin to St. Hilda's? Mike supposed that the police court would be reported in the evening papers in Liverpool. It would not be difficult for the Diamond Gang to raid a little local police station once they knew where Reddin was.

TRAVERS HUTCHIN

This meant he must work fast. Reddin was his main hostage for the safety of Arthur Mayo. He must lose no time tracing Mayo now.

· Unless, of course, he could trace Reddin himself. Apparently he had concealed his address from the police. Mike wondered whether he would dare to return to Brighton. He might, since Hotchkiss probably had no reason to think that Reddin's connection with this town had been traced.

He looked round the room. It was hard to believe that in this typical public house crowd there were toughs of the most dangerous type. But he was sure that men of Hotchkiss's gang were to be found in the groups around he did not want to be seen talking to a policeman in Reddin's bar. He could almost hear the bookmaker's thoughts as he told himself that he had been a fool to talk to strangers. Mike had frequently found that his height was a disadvantage in dealing with people who regarded policemen as dubious characters.

He looked across the bar. There was indeed a back room-anyway, there was a door in the centre of the bar which apparently led to another room. He saw the barman carrying a tray of drinks through this door, and from the number of glasses on it he surmised that there were eight or nine people in the back room.

But there was no opportunity of discovering any more about them, since the door was behind the bar.

He finished his drink and went out again into the street.

At the back of the Turkey Run was a narrow, dark passage which was apparently used mainly as a dump for empty bottles and packing cases. An iron gate which gave access to this alley was locked, but he easily scrambled over it.

Half-way along the passage was a back door into the public house. Mike went past it before trying the lock. The passage was a cul-de-sac and ended in a high wall. He retraced his steps to the door, fairly confident that if he needed to find a quick hiding place the pitch-dark end of the passage would afford cover. He listened carefully at the keyhole. He could hear the distant sound of the crowd in the saloon bar, the clink of glasses and the ringing of the till. But there were no sounds near at hand.

THE GANG CAME OUT MIKE HID HIMSELF IN THE ALLEY.

A stout man sat at the table beside him. He leaned over to Mike and asked if he might have a look at the evening paper. Mike passed it over. After a glance at the back page, the stout man heaved a sigh of relief.

"Happy Munsterman has kept its place in the betting," he wheezed. "Thought there would be bad news at the call-over. Rumours that he wouldn't run. Bad for those who had backed him. Worse for me if he went out to ten-to-one and then ran after all. I'm a bookmaker, see? But it seems to have been all poppycock. No change."

. "Where did all these rumours about the horse come from?" Mike asked casually. "Don't know," said the other, shrugging his shoulders. "But it was all over the place here."

'Back·Room'

Then he leaned closer to Mike, a knowing look on his face.

"The boys in the back room knew all about it, anyway. And you've got to listen to them. They usually know." He swivelled his eyes towards the back of the bar, as if to point out where "the boys in the back room" were to be found, and then winked.

"Are they great experts on racing?" Mike asked, as if not greatly interested.

The stout man gazed at him for a moment before replying. "They know what they're about," he said abruptly. Then he gulped down his whisky and left the bar.

Mike guessed that he was wondering whether he was a policeman and that

He decided to take a risk, and gently turned the handle of the door.

It opened quietly. Inside was a corridor, dimly lit by one electric bulb. At the far end was a door with a glass panel. He recognised it as the door he had seen in the bar. Halfway down the corridor was another door. Mike ran swiftly along to this door and immediately heard voices. He suddenly regretted that in his previous contacts with Hotchkiss he had let the gangster do so little of the talking. For now he was not sure whether the voice was his or not-but it seemed to have the same tone.

"Which other way, boss?" asked another occupant of the room. "Both," snapped the first speaker. "You've got to give that Mayo a workout tonight. Has anybody gone to London to see if that bitch of a daughter of his has written that letter? It should be there in the morning. Did she sound as if she would do it, Tiny?"

"Sure, boss," Mike recognised the spurious American accent he had heard on the phone the night before. gave her the works good and proper. She was crying when I had finished with her, I guess. I think she'll do it, boss."

Plotting

Mike felt an overwhelming urge to open the door and give the speaker "the works." He promised himself that pleasure one day soon.

"Well, find out tomorrow, somebody," growled the voice of the man called "And bring it down here as quick as possible, because I want to use it on Mayo. Better go yourself,

Tiny." There was the sound of chairs scraping on the floor. Mike crept rapidly back down the corridor and out into the dark alley. He had not even time to shut the door before that of the "back room" was beginning to open. He retreated to the far end of the alley and pressed himself flat against the wall.

When Hotchkiss came out the back door of the pub he was blaspheming violently. The object of his abuse was whoever "had left that so and-so door open as if this was a so-and-so mission hall that people came into whenever they felt like it."

Diamond was followed by a very tall man-Mike wondered whether he was Tiny. He could not see more than his silhouette against the lights of the street at the far end of the alley.

SCHOOL IS A JEEP

An ex British officer, Major C. S. Pryce Davies, has devised something new in the way of schools.

His "school" consists of a jeep fitted up with a cinematograph and several which he claims are sufficient to "profilms which he has made himself, and vide a very useful educational back ground."

He is travelling in Africa and taking his "achool" around with him. Lessons are given in the open air as well as tendoors.

This is how the Major organises his Serone (Prography consists of prime of British life; and travelogues of Africa, India, Torkey, Italy and France.

History is represented by a series of tweive films in which children play the parts of famous men and women of the past. Arithmetic is taught by close up examples of sums worked out on the bisekboard with a running commentary.

"I hope that one day the cinema will be used much more as a means of education," says the Major.

His pupils agree. They are usually serry when he packs up his jeep and departs. He has had several offers of permanent work by various Governments, but prefers to travel around. (From G. D. K. McCornick Tangier.)

ZBW PROMS

Starting with a light overture, tonight's "Proms Concert" from ZBW goes on to a somewhat lengthy clarinet concerto and ends with a Tchaikovsky symphony—the almost inevitable "Fifth." The latter is deservedly popular, but too many sweets sometimes occasion a tooth-ache and one rather wishes Nos. 1, 2 and 3 were given a look-in once in a while.

The overture and the concerto are linked, in a way, for Weber was a cousin of Mozart's by marriage. Weber (1786-1826, when he died of TB in London) was the great pioneer of romanticism in German opera. He seized upon the fashions of his time and developed them into something new. His style is a mixed one—so many parts Rossini, so many Second Period Beethoven in derivation and so many the popular, trivial German music of his day. His music is flashy stuff-operatic, in fact! -and makes little call on one's intellect or deeply rooted emotions. Nevertheless, he has an important place in 19th Century music, and the influence of his personality can be seen in the works of both Mendelssohn and Wagner.

The original pre-Weber form of German opera was the Singspiel, in which simple tunes are given to simple peasant types and florid tunes to florid aristrocratic types. His opera "Abu Hassan" -the overture to which will be heard tonight—is a comic Singspiel and originally consisted of the overture and eight vocal numbers. It is pleasant to listen to, but is by no means within even hailing distance of his "Der Freischutz."

Mozart may be said to have established the concerto form as we know it to-Originally, the solo instrument was really just one among the many instruments of the orchestra. C.P.E. Bach saw the great possibilities that existed if one treated it as the protagonist and contrasted it with the rest of the orchestra. It took a Mozart, howeyer, to develop Bach's hesitant and somewhat fumbling attempts and pave the way for the whole series of great concertos that have since been written.

So far as wind instruments are concerned, Mozarts' horn concertos were written with tongue rather obtrusively in cheek. His concerto for the clarinet, however, was written in a serious vein. for this was his favourite instrument. Careful study of this concerto will show that it has formed the foundation forall modern clarinet playing. Unfortunately, it fends to be somewhat tedious.

Some critics put Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony higher than his Sixth. though this is hardly likely to be the verdict of the ordinary listener. These two, with the Fourth, have now achieved what one writer calls "notorious popularity."

This is, perhaps understandable, as Tchaikovsky is pre-eminently easy to listen to. He is a convenient steppingstone for the beginner who wants to start listening to something more than Dorsey and Shaw but who finds himself somewhat lost in the depths of Brahms and Stravinsky. Tchaikovsky has none of the cold, impersonal displays of technique that Brahms loved. One can listen to his music, and feel its emotions, without having to think about it very deeply. His melodies are recognisable and appealing, his harmonies simple yet rich, and his orchestration is always brilliant to an almost glittering degree.

His Fifth Symphony is a typical example. It is exciting and the mottotheme, though it undergoes changes in both character and rhythm, appears in all four movements. The symphony is in the key of E Minor but after the motto-theme has been heard in a spooky aspect in the third movement it triumphs in the finale in a major key to sweep the listener to an exciting and extremely powerful climax.

Footnote:-Wonder if we could hear ("Little Russian") Second the Symphony before the end of the month?

PARRY

Friday this week sees the 100th anniversary of the birthday of (Sir Charles) Hubert Parry, and a special programme will be broadcast by the BBC at 2215 hours Hong Kong time. ZBW, unfortunately, will have to let the occasion pass in silence as, apart from "Jerusalem," there appear to be no recordings of his works available locally. Even the recent addition to ZBW's library of records presented by the British Council was deficient in this respect.

The BBC programme will feature the London Symphony Orchestra Stanford Robinson cond.), the BBC Chorus (Leslie Woodgate, chorus-master) and Herbert Dawson at the organ. Stanford Robinson will direct the performance of Parry's "Third Symphony in C Major." Op. 64, while Woodgate will conduct the remainder of the programme, consisting of "Jerusalem," "Blest Pair of Sirens," and two of the "Songs of Farewell"-"There is an Old Belief" and "My Soul, There is a Country far beyond the Stars."

Parry may be called the founder of the modern English revival and, with Stanford, he not only helped our composers to sever themselves from the Mendelssohnian traditions but also paved the way for the great Elgar. A man of tremendous energy, he focussed his attention on uniting the two streams of English poetry and English music. He was a prolific composer, though many of his works never survived more than one performance. What did survive, though, was good and the BBC programme on Friday night is an appropriate one to do him honour.

"There is an Old Belief," incidentally, was sung at the service in October, 1918, which preceded his cremation and the placing of his ashes in the crypt of St. Paul's "Blest Pair of Sirens" was first performed by the great Bach Choir in 1887.

"Y" CONCERT

The European YMCA concert of gramophone music on Friday evening will consist of the following works:-

Rossini's overture to "La Scala de Seta": Arthur Bliss's Piano Concerto (heard in last week's ZBW Proms): Mendelssohn's Nocturne and Scherzo from "A Midsummer, Night's Dream"; and Handel's suite "The Faithful Shepherd" (arr. Beecham).

BOY TREBLE

Sixteen-year-old Gerald Smith, an exceptionally fine boy treble who goes to Highgate School, London, will be heard in the BBC General Overseas Service this week. Music is his only real hobby (he has been singing since he was nine) and he plays the organ (for which he passed an examination with distinction), the piano and the violin.

Gerald will be singing three songs. one accompanied by a piano and the other two by the Westminster Players (piano, violin, cello, clarinet and flute). He will be heard on Thursday at 1415 hours HK Time, Friday at 0630 hours and Sunday at 0015 hours.

Written in July, 1779 and revived by the composer three years later with the addition of a minuet and a trio, Mozart's "Symphony No. 33 in B flat" has a simnle orchestral theme-oboes, horns and bassoons with the strings. This is one of the more scarcely performed of the Mozart symphonies. It is chiefly interesting in that the bassoons are independent of the basses, instead of doubling for them, which was the tendency in older or less personally expressive scores.

Columbia have issued a recording by the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra (cond. Herbert von Karajan). The catalogue comment says:-"There are. from day to day, so many scratch performances of various Mozartean works -well-intentioned, careful, painstaking even, but sadly heavy-handed-which somehow fail to grip you. This tone is 4 very different; vital, and full of lightand shade, with the players giving of their best." Listeners will hardly agree with this puff. The recording is of a competent performance, but a heavy. dull one.

The symphony takes up five sides of three records. The sixth side is a recording by the same orchestra of Mozart's "Marriage of Figaro" overture. This is much more pleasing, if only because Karajan has treated this not as a somewhat stolid piece of music for the concert hall but as it was really written-as an overture. The catalogue listings are LX1006-8, auto, couplings LX8568-70.

BBC CONCERTS

There are two concerts being broadcast by the BBC at hours suitable for local listeners this week. Both are in the General: Overseas Service on Wednesday.

At 2015 hours, the BBC Symphony Orchestra (Sir Adrian Boult cond.) will present two works-Beethoven's "Leonora No. 1" overture and Moeran's "Concerto for violin and orchestra." Albert Sammons will be the soloist.

Then, at 2320 hours, there is the gramophone - record - concert entitled "Forces Prom." The works to be heard this week are:-

"Tannhauser" Wagner's overture (London Philharmonic, conducted by Sir Thomas Beecham).

Liszt's "Piano Concerto No. 1 in E Flat" Emil Sauer and the Paris Conservatoire Orchestra conducted by Felix Weingartner).

Wagner's "Ride of the Valkyries" (London Philharmonic, conducted by Victor de Sabata).

"SWAN LAKE"

According to a United Press message from New York, quoting a letter from Moscow . Tchaikovsky's first ballet, "Swan Lake," recently had its 500th performance in the same theatre that saw its premiere. This was the Bolshoi Theatre, Moscow, where -70 years ago -an extremely nervous, slightly eneminate, 37-year-old composer watched Czarist Russia's second-best ballet perform his first dance score.

It was not until several years later that "Swan Lake" had its debut in the St. Petersburg Theatre, then recognised as Russia's best. Only then was the immortality of "Swan Lake" assured by the leading critics of the day.

The Bolshoi's "Golden Horseshoe" had been filled with frock-coated men and tiaraed women, but their appreciation was unimportant compared with the acclaim of the St. Petersburg critics.

Since that performance, the Bolshoi company has presented seven different versions of the ballet—the most famous of which, perhaps was that by the ballet-master Gorsky at the turn of the century. The newest presentation, which had its debut in 1937, returned to the original score and has now been shown 170 times.

The "anniversary performance" starred the Stalin prize-winner. Marina Semenova, who has appeared in the role of Odetta more often than any of the other modern Russian ballerinas.

THE MEDICAL CONTROVERSY: PRO AND CON

Happiness Crusade?

By DR. SOMERVILLE HASTINGS

The National Health Service Actwill provide for the people of this country the best health service that the world has eyer known.

It cannot come into full operation all at once, for many more hospitals are required and health centres have yet to be built. More doctors nurses, and especially dentists are also needed.

What it will do, however, is to permit of the best use being made of the resources that we have, and others will be added according to plan, and not merely haphazard as in the past.

Moreover, the services will be free to all who need them, being paid for through rates, taxes, and insurance contributions.

Most of the people who will make use of these services appear to be quite well satisfied, but the doctors who will help to provide them seem less enthusiastic.

So far the doctors have been critical of any scheme for a national health service that has been suggested including that of the Coalition Government.

The B.M.A. was quite ready to permit the State to pay for the treatment of those who could afford only small fees or none at all.

THE BRITISH GLANDULAR.

PRODUCTS LTD.

LONDON

(The Original Gland Firm Eslb. 1929)

It was also prepared to advocate the extension of the "panel" to the wives and dependants of the insured provided the doctors were left free to make their own charges to the better-off.

But when the Government decided to accept the Beveridge proposals and provide a universal insurance scheme of which a national health service is an essential part, it became clear that, as all were involved and had to contribute, none could be legitimately excluded from the health provisions.

The Government therefore felt compelled to accept responsibility for such a health service and set about to devise a scheme that would provide for the public needs and at the same time satisfy the desires and prejudices of the medical profession.

The doctors asked to be permitted to combine public and private practice, and this was agreed; they demanded free choice of doctor, and this was accepted; they objected to taking service under existing local authorities, and two bodies with appointed members were created. In no other service has such power in moulding and direction been given to those engaged.

But the doctors are still not satisfied. They say that what they desire above all else is professional freedom—freedom to do the very best they know for each individual patient—and were it clear that this was their only aim they would have the support of all right minded people.

But what they are actually demanding is something very different. They object that in addition to a capitation payment a basic salary of £300 is to be paid to make it easier for the young doctor to start in practice.

One would have imagined that this would have increased professional free-

Moreover, we cannot forget that the B.M.A. Planning Commission in 1942; recommended that the remuneration of the general practitioners should consist of a basic salary and capitation fees, plus payment for other services.

The doctors ask that the sale and purchase of practices shall be retained. But how can it be in the public interest and how can professional freedom be increased by the outgoing holder of a public appointment having the sole right to nominate his successor, his selection being determined by the amount of money that can be put up?

The doctors also demand that all who join the public service shall be allowed to settle wherever they like. Those already in practice will, of course, be permitted to remain where they are.

But surely it is in the public interest that, while choice of all areas where there are insufficient doctors is given to new entrants, the needs of underdoctored regions should first be satisfied.

Unfortunately, some of the doctors appear to be unready to co-operate with the Minister for the benefit of the 45 millions who will be affected by the Act.

The doctors' word has been regarded as law in medical matters by their patients—and rightly so—for so long that they have come to regard themselves almost as a privileged class.

The National Health Services Act is a compromise—an attempt to get the best out of all worlds—the vision of a planned economy of the Labour Party in which the best is at the service of all, and also the direct personal relationship between doctor and patient so rightly stressed by the profession.

Of course it fully pleases no one. Nevertheless, given good will on all sides a real improvement in national health and well-being must result.

MEDICINE IN CHAINS? By Dr. CHARLES HILL

Secretary of the British Medical Association

There is both agreement and disagreement about the National Health Service Acts.

First, the field of agreement.
The doctors welcome a comprehent sive health service available to every citizen; in hospital, in the committing coom, and at home. They want the people to have it, adding a warring that all that will be available on the appointed day is what a here now. Acts don't create doctors and surrous and beds.

The doctors welcome, for example, the creation of a national hospital service marrying together council and voluntary hospitals and the organisation of hospitals in large units over large areas.

They believe in social security, for every day they, of all people, come up against the evil results of insecurity. The ideal of a fine service available to everyon was theirs even before Gov.

Now for disagreement. Some of the means to the agreed end are in dispute. At bottom, the main issue is that the doctors believe that it would be bed for you and had for them if they were to become salaried servants of the State.

The doctor must remain your doctor, responsible to you, free to act according to his conscience in advice, in trestment, and in certification.

Doctors believe that some of the sections of these Arts take them neares to becoming State servants.

Why do they believe this? First, it is the published policy of the party in power. Mr. Arthur Greenwood confirmed in 1945 that the policy published in 1945 is still Labour Party policy.

When Mr. Aneurin Bevan, Minister of Health, was asked whether it was his intention, his answer was. That is all the difference in the world between plucking fruit when it is ripe and plucking it when it is green.

The doctors don't want to ripes as State servants but to remain as your servants. The doctors want to continue to own their own practices.

They want to be free to choose the area in which they will practise in a comprehensive service without having to ask the permission of a Government committee.

They want to be paid, not by salary, but in proportion to the number of people who choose them.

They recognise that some doctors in some circumstances will need salaries or guaranteed minimum remuneration.

But the Minister of Health wants every family doctor to be paid partly by salary. He has the power to change the proportion which is salary, sweat making all remuneration unlary, meetly by regulation.

Naturally, the doctors believe that this is a big step towards making them State servants.

The service you want can be provided without making them State servants. The doctors think that it will be a better service if they remain an independent profession in contract with the State rather than just a salaried branch of government.

Mr. Key told the House of Comments in 1945 that wholestime salaried service is inconsistent with free choice of doctor. The doctors want you to have free choice of family doctor.

For a year the doctors representatives have been in discussion with the representatives of the Minister examining the Acts line by line. At the end the Minister stands where he stood and the doctors came away with nothing.

Fortunately, the Acts give them the right to decide whether or not to enter the service. That is what the decises are now doing.

By a plebiscite they are deciding as a body whether or not they are in favour of entering the service.

If they decide against entering it will not be because they are opposed to a national health service; it will be because they want certain changes made.

NEW BUTTER

has recently arrived in Hongkong Requiring no refrigeration, this butter still retains all the vitamin and calorific values, and most im portant, the taste of the original

It needs only a little preparation for table use and none for cooking, and is yet another boon which science has provided for the housewife.

During the early experimental stages, the more difficult problems involving bacterial deterioration, texture and solidity were overcome with comparative ease, but it was found the true butter flavour could not be retained. The solution to this was a simple pricess by which the salt to be added was finely ground-and then success was achieved.

If the term "cup" is used in cooking recipe, it means the equivalent of one-half pint. Therefore, two cups equal one I pint, four cups equall one quart.

this 'Two-Way' Treatment

I GARGLE FREQUENTLY WITH T.C.P.

Every few hours gargle thoroughly, and also rinse out the nostrils with diluted T.C.P. This treatment tackles the infection in the nose and throat, T.C.P. penetrates right into the membranes enichly relieves any throat soveness and opens up clagged mostrils.

Night and morning, take 1 or 2 tepspacetal of T.C.I, in half a glass of water. These does help the system to throw off any Gold toxins (poisons) that may enter the body from the nose and throat, and which cause feverishness and headache.

This new "Two-Way", Treatment gets at infection internally, as well as in the nose and throat.

OBVIOUSLY, if you feel a Cold coming on, the first place to tackle it is where the germs lodge and multiply—in the nose and throat membranes. But don't forget that the general symptoms of a heavy Cold — feverishness and headache - are caused by toxins (poisons) escaping from the nose and throat into the system. So, to make reasonably certain of stopping a Cold quickly, you need to tackle it internally, as well as by gargling.

"That's just what the T.C.P. "Two-Way" Treatment enables you to do. For T.C.P. is a really safe antiseptic that you can use as a gargle and take internally as well. And it's the internal antisepticaction of T.C.P. that helps your system, to throw off the Cold toxins quickly before they can get a hold.

Now you can see why this new treatment is so effective. Nine times out of ten, if you start the treatment early enough, it will stop a Cold completely, overnight.

THE REALLY SAFE EXTERNAL AND INTERNAL ANTISEPTIC

T. C. P. Preparations are now obtainable at all leading Dispensaries and Stores.

ANUARY, 1948—and what does fashion hold for us? It is safe to predict that this is a year that will seal the transition from the "Old Look" to the "New Look," when the small-waisted, rounded, doll silhouette will only be rivalled by the equally feminine "Cocoon," or wrapped-round silhouette, and when angularity will bid farewell. Even shoulders will become softly rounded. As for skirts, there are already rumours from America that mid-calf length will be right for spring and that women have tired of the too long skirt. .

Here Berill has illustrated some of the new tendencies: 1. A dressmaker suit in fine wool has a tightly fitting top, a nipped-in waist and a short jacket flaring out over the hips to give a dancingdoll silhouette. 2. A shawl top curtains the rounded shoulders of this Infanta coat which has a wide pulled in belt to make for that "little"

3. For the long-limbed woman is the "Cocoon" or wrapped-round silhouette. Here the checked lacket is worn open to show how the clever use of pockets draws attention to the hips and gives a pegtop look to the skirt.

4. To prove that the long jacket is still with us, note this 1948 version with its softly rounded collar, wide armholes, tiny waist, and the spectacular pockets which give the necessary emphasis to the hips without the use of padding. EDNA McKENNA

Amateurs Models

Britain's artists' models have into more details of this really declared "open war" on society ing away their livelihood by posing for small fees or, in some cases, for no fees at all.

Backed up by a new association they have drawn up "professional charter" that not only provides for "a closed shop," but seeks similar conditions to those prevailing in the United States,

The Models Association charged that too many wealthy women in search of a new diversion are offering themselves as models.

Pay Artists Some of them are even said to be prepared to pay artists to allow them to pose, 'An artist, however, declared

"I can not afford to refuse the services of any woman who offers to pose for nothing. An Influential woman who is now posing for me has promised to get me quite a number of commissions among her friends." Miss Pat Murphy, Secretary of the Association, said: "We have won our first victory with an assurance by art schools in different parts of the country that only members of our association will in future be employed by them. But our biggest complaint is against the casuals who pose for individual artists 'just for the fun of it." ARMY FOOTBALL LEAGUE Land Forces Still At Head Of Table

Pedigree Pups Come Position This_week both-the Inniskillings and HQ_Land-

51-month-old pointers are expected to arrive in Hong Kong from Australia via Singapore by BOAC plane to-morrow to Join their mother "Peggy," who reached the Colony ahead of them during the week. "Peggy" arrived by the "Nellore."

The pups, flown by Malayan Airways from Sydney to Singapore, thence by BOAC plane to

Hong Kong, are a litter of "Peggy" and "Laddie,"

"Peggy" is the holder of the Second Prize in the Melbourne Obedient Test of 1947, "Laddie," a trial winner, is still in Sydney, "Peggy" purchased by Mr. ney. "Peggy" purchased by Mr. Emile Landau, proprietor of the Parisian Grill, for £100 has was sold in Sydney. The pups which are to arrive tomorrow

are the second litter

Considering the journey by sea too strenuous for the pups, Mr. Landau decided to get them to Hong Kong by air. The cost of flying the seven pointer pups here from Australia via Singapore worked out at about HK$460 each.

After the necessary inoculations, the pups will be offered for sale by their owner. "Poggy" claims to have as long a pedigree line as any other pointer in Australia will participate in the Dog Show scheduled for March 21.

Boxer Dies After K.O. Chicago, Feb. 21.

Sam Baroudi, 20-year-old heavyweight fighter from New York, died without regaining consciousness after being knocked out last night in a bout with Ezzard Charles, Cincinnati, leading contender for the light heavyweight championship.

The doctor said Baroudi dled of. brain haemorrhage caused by a series of blows on the head and said he was not certain if the injuries occurred in last night's fight.

However, Dr. Joseph P. Cascino, brain surgeon, said it "seemed apparent" the haemorrhage was caused by the knock-out blow in the tenth round. -United Press.
